Sociology Student Spotlight

ZOE BANDES

Originally an occupational therapy major, Zoe decided to switch to Sociology because she enjoyed the challenge of learning to think critically about structural forces and the world around us. She says, “When I switched to sociology, I felt a world of difference in my level of interest and engagement for all of my classes.”

Zoe is also a musician. She started playing guitar when she was just seven years old, and wrote songs and played in different bands in high school. In college, playing guitar, she says, “has contributed the most to my well being, relationship building, and academic performance over the past two years.” She is currently in a jazz band and has a few other side projects, and regularly performs. Keep an ear out for Zoe!

Congratulations, Zoe!
