Sociology Student Spotlight

SARAH HUSSAIN

Sarah is working on an honors thesis related to medical sociology. She is passionate about understanding health inequalities and health disparities. Her research explores the perceptions of people from different socio-demographic backgrounds about several hot-button health issues, including prescription drug advertising and health care reform.

Sarah also participated in the 2014 Semester in London program, where she completed an internship with a wheelchair service organization for youth called Whizz-Kidz. As part of her internship, she got to work with children and adults during clinics, training sessions, and community outreach events like the London Marathon. “London,” she says, “will forever hold some of the fondest memories of my life.”

Sarah plans to pursue a graduate degree related to Global Public Health next year.

Congratulations, Sarah!
