

December 2017

Sociology Student Spotlight

ANNA BLATTO

When asked why she became a sociology major, Anna explains: “After taking a few classes and exploring my options, I discovered I had a passion for cities and how people interact within them. Therefore, I used sociology as an opportunity to learn more about urban environments and the unique interactions that take place.”

After graduation, Anna plans on taking a gap year to do volunteer work. After that, she wants to enroll in a joint law and urban planning graduate program. She explains: “My ultimate goal is to work on social justice issues within the planning field and create more equitable environments within urban areas through effective community development.”

Congratulations Anna!